Excerpt: . . . 11 APHIS moved quickly to publish its final rule establishing a voluntary trichinae certification program for U. S. pork, as outlined in the 2008 Farm Bill. The final rule was published in fall 2008. To help jump start the program, APHIS paid for on-farm audits and waived the program user fee in FY 2009. In FY 2010, APHIS carried out outreach and promotion activities for the new program, and funded farms as they moved from the pilot program into the official program. However, despite Agen-cy and industry efforts, demand for the program has been low because none of our trading partners currently recognize this program to be used for fresh pork export assurances with regard to Trichinella at this time. We recognize the importance of this issue, and will be working with industry to address this issue through the World Organization for Animal Health (OIE) once key data is obtained to support such an effort. I would also like to update you on our progress moving forward with our new, flexible framework for animal disease traceability in the United States - a critical component of quick and successful disease response. APHIS is actively partnering with states, Tribal Nations, and industry, holding state and Tribal fora and public meetings to discuss ways of improving animal disease traceability, sharing the ap-proaches under discussion, and continuing the dialogue with stakeholders. As you know, last year USDA held 15 listening sessions across the country, and we heard from thousands of interested parties. We then incorporated that feedback...
